Baker Zoe Smith says the ingredients are a secret, but the cookies are delicious

Look out, Amos, here comes Zoe

By ALICE M. NAGLE

The ultimate cookie — golden brown, chewy but not doughy, made of pure ingredients like real vanilla, nutmeg, with chocolate chips and nuts. That's how baker Zoe Smith, 31, describes her cookies.

"Zoe's Cookies" can be found in glass jars with a logo of a curly-headed girl, a picture of her 3-year-old daughter, Nia, peeking over a giant cookie. Smith distributes her brownies, chocolate chip and walnut-coconut cookies to 40 shops and restaurants in the East Bay.

Her recipes are secret. The chocolate chip one came from the back of a Lucky's chocolate chips bag. After months of experimenting, she hit upon the combination. (Guitard chocolate is one of the ingredients.)

"Even with my recipe, someone else couldn't bake my cookies," Smith says. It takes a special technique — you must know the exact number and frequency of beats and the desired texture, somewhere between creamy and fluffy.

Smith has no baking education. "I hate to cook meals but have always loved to bake," she says. Her college degree is in art. Smith's business, "Zoe's Cookies and Other Delights," has been operating "legally" since April 1983.

Nine months before that, she sold muffins to offices. But the health department caught up with her and prevented her from selling homebaked goods without a business license.

Now Smith rises at 4:30 a.m. three days a week to bake at San Martin de Porres Bakery in Richmond. Five hours later, she packs up 60 dozen cookies in 35 bakery boxes, loads up her brown van and drives a circuit of nearly 70 miles to deliver the goodies.

Chocolate chip cookies are her best seller. The American chocolate chip cookie craze began in the mid '70s with such popular gourmet as Famous Amos, Mrs. Fields' and Unknown Jerome's.

Smith began her business with $1,000, half of it a loan from a friend. She sold some of her furniture and her piano and spent all her savings in the name of cookies. At about 60 cents a cookie, her income now is between $1,100 and $1,400 a month.

Smith is her own boss, which she likes.

"I'm a terrible employee. My hair goes up when people tell me what to do," Smith also works her own hours, which can be weird. "The hours — baker's hours — are crazy, but the rewards are, it's mine."

With no business background, Smith takes the advice of self-employed friends. To begin a business you want to do it, be good at it, be determined and work "real hard."

There are frustrations — big ones, like the health department and all the little ones, which can be amusing.

When Nia was 18 months old, she fell into her mom's big bowl of batter "without her pants on." "I had to throw the dough away."

Smith hopes to increase her volume and income enough to buy a bakery, where she would sell a variety of baked goods. One reason to expand her menu is "in case the cookie business bottoms out."

Eventually, she would like to hire a manager and bakers and then go to a baking trade school or return to doing sculpture, her college major.

"I'm an artist at heart," says Smith, a self-described eccentric who likes privacy and hates schedules.

"When I'm doing sculpture, I feel I'm doing what I'm supposed to do."

Does Smith still eat her cookies? She gained 5 pounds when she began her business. Now she goes on binges where she might eat a dozen a day, then none for a few weeks.

"They're wonderful," she says. "I just burn off the calories baking them."

By Oswald Jacoby and James JacobyAnyone can play well with aces and kings. It takes a real genius to work with one jack. West made his normal opening lead of the diamond king. A normal East would have shown three diamonds by dropping the deuce, but this East was a schemer. He didn't want a shift to another suit. His jack was worthless anyway, so East made the deceptive play of the diamond nine.

West read this as a signal of doubt and continued with the ace. East completed his echo with the deuce and West led a third diamond. Now let's go back to South. If East held a doubleton diamond, it was up to South to play the 10 from dummy. East would get his ruff, but South would have dummy's queen of diamonds for a heart discard. So South went wrong and called for dummy's 10. East took his jack for the third defensive trick and since West held a sure trump trick, South was down one.

We can't really blame South. East's inspired deceptive play cost South his contract. (NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSN.)
